Colonel Moses Shoenberg seventy-two years old, a founder and Vice-President of the May Department Stores Company, died suddenly from a stroke at the Chase Hotel, St. Louis. Colonel Shoenberg was born in Dayton, Ohio, December 2, 1852, and received his education in the public schools of that city. At the age of twenty-two he embarked upon his successful business career by establishing a small haberdashery in Dayton. Four years later he moved to Leadville, Col., where he went into business with his brother-in-law, establishing the firm of Max Shoenberg. He later went to Kansas City to enter into partnership with Bernheimer Brothers & Co. In 1892 he came to St. Louis and he and his associates acquired possession of the "Famous," later purchasing the business of D. Crawford & Co., and shortly afterward the William Barr Dry Goods Company. Such was the start of the present May Stores now one of the largest retail enterprises in the world. ## The Jewish Question in Jugo-Slavia

BY C. F. MELVILLE.

There are in Jugo-Slavia, with a population of 14,000,000, comparatively few Jews, approximately 140,000 in all. In the majority, the Jews are business people, bankers and industrialists by profession. There are only a few manual workers among them.

According to the old Serbian ideas, which play a prominent role in the new state, the Jews have equal rights with other nationals (Serbs, Croats and Slovenes). All society circles are open to them, as well as positions in the state service. There has never been any anti-Semitism, so that in that respect no tradition exists.

The only exception to this general state of affairs is to be found in Bosnia, where there are many Slav elements which profess Islam and which although they do not speak any language but Serbian, are in religious questions very exclusive. They consider themselves more orthodox even than the Turks. Their aristocracy and intellectuals exploit this exclusiveness for purely political purposes. They play before the people a demagogical and often not very correct or modern role. The standard of culture of the Moslem masses in Bosnia is exceptionally low. The largest percentage of illiterates is to be found among this population.

Jugoslavia has two political parties which stand upon a purely religious basis: The Slovene Clericals and the Bosnian Moslems. The first as well as the second has its head of the church abroad: The first looks towards Rome and the second to Constantinople. For these their politics is a purely religious matter.

In Bosnia there are comparatively many Jews, who represent economically a very great force. They are, especially in financial questions, a factor to reckon with; but at the present time these Jews constitute the greatest opposite to the local political interests of the Bosnian Moslems.

The Bosnian Jews are of the opinion that Jugoslavia must remain a centralistic state. They follow a strict, positive policy in demanding from the state good highroads and railways, good industrial and financial laws and commercial treaties with Great Britain, France, Germany and Switzerland. On the other hand the lazy, fatalistic Moslem masses are sitting in their cafes, baths, mosques and bazaars and smoking hookahs. The Jews carry on their business mainly with the Serbs, who diligently till their ground and do a small trade and who compose the main element of the Bosnian consumers. The Moslems are extremely modest in their needs and are satisfied with bread, fruit, some liquors, some brandy and coffee. They require no banks, railways or industrial enterprises.

On the occasion of the last election in Jugoslavia, they came into conflict with the Bosnian Jews. The Moslems appeared as autonomists, while the Jews were centralists. By reason of their well-balanced interest the jews cast their votes for the Radicals of M. Pasitch, so that the Moslems lost some of their mandates, one of which was in Serajevo. Such an electoral result was a great shock to the Moslems, so that they at once became anti-Semite. With fanatic religious hate, they turned their weapons against the Jews, led by their Chief Priest, Reiss-El-Ulema, who proclaimed the principle that the Jews were traitorous to Bosnian solidarity. Reiss-El-Ulema says: "I shall always vote Moslem in electoral lists, without regard to whether the candidate is a fool or a good man. It is written in the Koran that the Israelites will never have an empire, but the Jews have about succeeded in founding a state by material means. This state is Palestine, where all the sacred things of our prophets are now in danger of being destroyed. Shall we then still give our money to the Jews? No, we shall boycott their shops and bazaars and we shall not buy their goods. It is the duty of every faithful Moslem and it is the will of God."

The Moslems and their party are now carrying out this campaign. Their political organ, Pravda, which has only 1,200 readers among 120,000 electors, has commenced the campaign, which is very characteristic. The political organ of the Bosnian Jews, called "Juedisches Legion," has strongly responded to this provocation. The Jewish leader, Dr. Poliokan, writes in his paper as follows: "In an emergency, we shall use all possible lawful means." But this is not all.

The Moslems have started to boycott the Jewish shops, of which there are eighty in Serajevo and 120 in the provinces. The Jews, on their part, are ready to answer by countermeasures, and their intention is to dismiss all Moslems employed as workmen and clerks in their businesses. The number of those so employed goes into thousands. They have in view also another countermeasure. The Jews have a considerable amount of money invested in Moslem enterprises. All this money will be removed, without exception.

Public opinion in Serbia is greatly grieved by such an attitude and it appeals to the Jews that they, as more educated and reasonable people, should not lose sight of the interest of the state. The authorities have had no reason to intervene, as there have been no breaches of the peace.

Dr. Leo S. Rowe, Director General of the Pan-American Union, is to give a round-table on "Outstanding Problems in Inter American Relations" under the auspices of the Institute of Politics, the fifth annual session of which opened at Williamstown, Mass., last Thursday. More than 200 college professors, diplomats, editors, army and navy officers, and other specialists in foreign affairs, will discuss the leading questions of the day in the relations of the United States to the other nations of the world.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour
That for what it cost me to be free
I might have had an anchor."

Before the present visit to America of Count Alexander Skrzynski, Polish Minister of Foreign Affairs, there was some discussion in the Jewish press as to what should be the attitude of Jewish organizations to the statesman when he came here. Since his arrival, a Jewish delegation has waited on him at the Hotel Ambassador in New York and there was the usual exchange of fair words, smooth and diplomatic, and low bows and good wishes for the health of all. American Jews who were represented there gave no sign of looking a gift horse in the mouth too intently, at least not in public, and so, if there was any anxiety concerning the recent Polish-Jewish agreement for which Skrzynski was chiefly responsible, it was well under cover. However, careful examination of this gift horse and its going qualities is by no means out of place wherever it is being undertaken.

For several years after the war and up to the time of the recent agreement between the Polish Government and the Club of Jewish deputies, the Polish Jews have been in a critical situation. They were caught in a great anti-Semitic movement; the economic boycott was employed against them vindictively; special taxes were imposed on occupations, chiefly Jewish; Jewish traders were hampered by the prohibition of retail commerce on Sunday; Jews were threatened with the withdrawal of licenses to trade in articles of State monopoly, and numerical restrictions were placed on students in the universities and on candidates for the professions. Three millions of Jews nursing a long list of grievances constituted a desperately oppressed minority.

Under the recent treaty of peace brought about between Dr. Leon Reich, president of the Club of Jewish Deputies, with Dr. Thon, another member, and Count Skrzynski, two hours of trade are permitted on Sunday; the quota system in the army, civil service and institutions of higher learning is to be abandoned, and promise has been made that the Jews may move up from the role of discontented element to their proper place as a co-operating citizenry of the country in equality with non-Jews.

That this Polish-Jewish agreement is as much a triumph for financial necessity as it is for moral pressure at home and elsewhere is seen in the fact that the Jews were to "inform those interested abroad that the Polish government is fulfilling Jewish requirements." Certainly the Polish government experienced no sudden conversion to the principles of brotherhood and justice, else the other minorities also would enjoy such promises as the Jews have been given. If the government is making big concessions to the Jews it is because its credit and prestige abroad is suffering through the general impression that millions of people are being mistreated. It is for a more urgent reason than to pass the time of day with President Coolidge that Count Skrzynski came to this country.

Four days after his arrival here, word came from back home that Trampczynski, speaker of the Polish senate and a figure in the Polish National Democratic party, expressed skepticism of the effectiveness of the Polish-Jewish agreement. It may not be so ill-placed, for from the outset the agreement was not submitted to the Polish Sejm, the legislative organ. The government ordinances for the improvement of the Jewish status were issued by the Council of Ministers and were therefore administrative measures, not part of the legislation of Poland. They can be annulled or revoked with ease. Had they been legislative, they would have had a stable quality and would have held more security for the Jews than they do now as mere administrative measures.

The Jews have no real guarantee from the Polish government. Count Skrzynski himself has said since his arrival here, that "If the Jews work for the welfare of Poland and if the Polish press will break the anti-Semitic psychology of the Polish masses, no guarantee is necessary." This sounds pretty thin stuff to bank on. The only thing for the Jews to hope is that Poland will continue to need loans and international respect and by this need be compelled to keep faith.

Social Life about 25 Years Ago— Do You Remember?—

The Toronto Literary gave an at home at the Temple Building at which seventy couples were present. There were twenty-three dances and two promenades. Mrs. Levetus wore lace over burnt orange taffeta; Mrs. Maurice Frankel, pale blue brocaded satin and Miss Saxe, of Montreal, black lace robe spangled with silver over white satin. Herman Frankel, of Montreal, was visiting the Maurice Frankels.

In Quebec, Miss Sarah Lazerovich was married to Davie Lecker at the Grant Street Synagogue by Rev. M. I. Eliasaph. Bridesmaids were Misses Fickler, Hersberg and Adella Lax. Groomsmen were A. Leibovich, Mr. Lecker, brother of the groom; O. Orenstein and H. Lax. Supper was served at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. J. Lax, and dancing followed. The young men gave a dance at I.O.O.F. Hall with M. Cohen and A. Leibovich in charge. Proceeds were given to Rev. Eliasaph to be sent to Yasse, Roumania.

There was a public meeting of the Jews of Manitoba in Foresters' Hall, Winnipeg, to collect money for the Canadian Patriotic Fund. D. Balcovske was chairman. B. Zimmerman in his speech said that under the British flag, a Jew is treated as a man, not as in Russia, worse than a dog. M. Finkelstein said that, whereas in Russia, many Jews had fought against Turkey against their will, in Canada compulsion to serve was unknown. C. Finkelstein said that he had been asked in Russia for subscriptions for war widows by Russian officers whose asking was in the nature of a command, but in Winnipeg every one attended voluntarily. Other speakers were J. J. Shragge, H. Weldman, I. Rosen, S. Finkelstein, J. Feldman, L. Abramovitch, P. Kerchevsky, and Alf. I. Frankfurter recited "The Absent-Minded Beggar." The Shaarey Zedek Ladies' Aid Society gave $25. Miss Rose Ripstein and Roy Frankfurter gave musical numbers.

St. John Jews were caring for twelve women and children at the home provided by the Jewish Immigration Society. The Frog Whist Club was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Freedman.

HOLIDAY IN CANADA'S MOUNTAIN PLAYGROUNDS

The glories of Jasper National Park cannot be oversung. This mighty playground of 4,400 square miles offers more to do and greater sights to see than any similar area in the world. It is a scenic paradise unspoiled by the hand of man, with colossal mountains, evergreen slopes, flower-strewn passes, mirror-like heights and torrential rivers.

Excellent accommodation for the tourist is provided at Jasper Park Lodge. Rustic in design, beautifully appointed, with broad verandahs and high-class cuisine, this delightful and thoroughly modern resort accommodates 350 persons. Rates $6 per day up, American plan. In the fresh mountain air of Jasper, one takes special zest in summer sports—hiking, riding, golfing, playing tennis or enjoying the delightful motor trips to nearby glaciers, lakes and waterfalls.

The transcontinental trains of Canadian National leave Toronto daily for Western Canada. They are all steel and equipped for the luxurious comfort of the tourist.

Any Canadian National Agent will furnish illustrated booklets, tourist rates and such information as will help you to plan your trip to the great vacation playland of the West.

For the convenience of those desiring information on summer resorts and vacation trips in general, the Public Library of Toronto, Reference Division, corner College and St. George Streets, maintains a complete supply of tourist literature published by railway and steamboat lines. The Travel Bureau is open daily except Sunday, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 8 p.m.

In this country our press as a whole is independent and honest, free from the charge of venality, and for that reason exercises an influence and power that constitute it one of the main hallmarks of our liberty, Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of "The New York Times" and owner of the "Chattanooga Times," told members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association at Asheville, N.C. The speaker reviewed his more than fifty years of newspaper work, beginning with his connection with "The Knoxville Journal" and "a practical school of journalism conducted by Captain William A. Rule, that noble old man who still wields a facile pen at the age of eighty-six," on that paper. He mentioned numerous editors of the South with whom he had been associated during those years.

HADASSAH

The house which was until eight months ago the home of Nochum the Melamed, is situated on the side of the street nearest the synagogue. It has small shiny windows, and a narrow door admitting to a low, winding staircase and to the rooms on the top floor. The most attractive thing about the house is the grassy spot in front of the ground floor, guarded by a wooden fence. This adornment, in strange contrast with the surrounding neighbourhood, was once the simplest means by which Feigele, the only daughter of Nochum, could show her love for nature. To-day the green spot soothes her sad eyes and frequently inspires her imagination.

When Feigele, now in her twentieth year, looks back over her past life, a certain day and hour glides out of the darkness and stands out with moonlight brightness against the dusky background of her child-life. How well she remembers a little scene painted on her memory in indelible colours. She can see it so vividly. Evening; the little parlour, bright and warm; outside the snow falling, a soft white shower. Her mother and her aunt had gone to theatre, though grumbling and protesting against the weather, while father and Feigele had been left to amuse each other, Nochum proud of being left in charge of his little daughter. She sat huddled up on a low chair, her father fondling her brown locks.

"Father," she exclaimed suddenly, "when I grow up I mean to be a man, Mother says that a man can do great things."

A faint smile passed over her father's face, then he replied:

"A girl cannot become a man," and it seemed to her that for an instant his face darkened. She stretched out her little hand to him and asked:

"Then then you are sorry because I am a girl?" Her father held her slight fingers and she thought his mouth trembled as he answered:

"Once I regretted it, but now I love you more than life. I am happy when you are near me, my little, little Fiegele," and he kissed her on the forehead.

"I wish I could do something for you the way a boy would—if you had one," Feigele said after a short pause, and stood up. Everything was quiet for a minute, then Nochum drew her tenderly to his knees, passed his hand over her floating hair and said:

"There is one thing you could do, and do it at once, too."

Her beautiful eyes were lifted toward him and with some sudden impulse she touched with her soft lips the hand he had placed on her shoulder. "What, father what is the thing I could do?"

"I want you to memorize a short story which I am going to tell you right away. And in later years, perhaps in months, when you will grasp the inner meaning of the story—I want you to use it as a guide for a certain service which you will be bound to do me—it is the moral service that all Jewish sons owe to parents."

She threw her arms round his neck and whispered: "I am listening, father." Nochum began:

"Many years ago there lived a great Jewish educator whose name was Akiba. He experienced many sorrows in his life, but through all his sufferings he remained kind and just toward every man he met, and consoled the wicked people as well as the virtuous ones. Once Akiba met a spirit in the guise of a man carrying wood; the latter told Akiba that the wood was for the fire in Gehenna in which he was burned daily in punishment for having been cruel to the poor, and that he would be released from his awful torture if he had a son to recite the Kaddish—a recitation to which is ascribed the power of redeeming the dead from the suffering of Gehenna, and which is recited before a worshipping assembly that responds with the praise of God's name. Now Akiba learned that the man he met had utterly neglected his son. So Akiba cared for and educated the youth, so that one day he stood in the assembly and recited the Kaddish and released his father from Gehenna. Akiba's example strengthened the influence of the Kaddish and since then it is customary for every Jewish son and grandson to recite the Kaddish for the benefit of a departed parent."

Feigele's twelve-year-old mind worked hard. Her childish imagination shaped and painted Akiba, the neglected youth and the Gehenna. Then she cried out:

"Father, I am sure your soul will never go to Gehenna; I could swear by my life that you never did a wrong, never, never!"

Leaning back in his chair, with his eyes fixed on the floor, Nochum said gravely: "We all sin at some time or other. No man leaves the world as sinless as he came into it. I am nearing the end of the story and there are two facts I want you to bear in mind for always: That the daughter where there is no son may say the Kaddish, and that the Kaddish period lasts eleven months."

It was still in the room; a solemn, sacred stillness. Suddenly Nochum drew Feigele to his breast, took her head between his hands and said:

"Feigele, remember, where there is no son the daughter is to say the Kaddish. Now comes the minute I have been waiting for since I first beheld you in your mother's bed: now is the minute in which I am going to prepare you for the keeping of a holy oath. Swear, Feigele, swear, that after I leave this world, you will say the Kaddish every day for eleven months, so as to redeem my spirit from the Gehenna. Will you swear?"

For a minute not a sound broke the stillness. The eyes of the two motionless figures gleamed like black stars in a gilt sky. . . . The child-girl experienced a transformation—in that one minute she changed into a young woman; she comprehended the meaning of her father's request; she realized that there is life after death.

"I swear, father, I swear," Feigele exclaimed. The words rang like the tolling of a silver bell. To Nochum they sounded like a message from the Great Beyond. A happy light kindled in his eyes and he spoke almost breathlessly: "I know you will not fail to keep your oath. I will educate you like Akiba educated the neglected son, and then after I am dead, you will come among a worshipping assembly and say the Kaddish, and people will bless you, and they'll say: 'This is Feigele reciting the Kaddish; her father left no son behind him. Long life to her.' And my soul will listen and will sing from joy. I will assign your first lesson tonight memorize the Kaddish. Now say these words after me: "Yitgaddal . . . weyit Kaddish . . ." etc., etc.

Feigele does not remember whether she saw her mother that night. It was twilight when she fell asleep.

Eight months ago Feigele's father died. Punctual to the hour, she enters every morning the nearby Shul wherein a large assembly is already waiting for the morning service to begin.

"Sh! Here comes Feigele to say Kaddish," they whisper to one another as she approaches the lowest prayer-desk in the Shul. Soon the mournful sounds of her voice reach their ears. They listen attentively, shake their heads, and Feigele's tears mingle with their deep sighs. Many in the assembly stop to look after her tall, graceful figure as she slowly advances toward the exit of the Shul.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement in 160-acre blocks at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, mineral water power, fish, game and scenery, are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

For free copies write: H. A. MACDONELL, Director of Colonization, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario.

"Lang leben sol sie," says one.

"A guten mazel sol sie haben," remarks another.

"Der Gan-Eden wart auf ihr," answers a third.

Billions of seconds are drifting invisibly around the angelic figure of the orphan, tenderly shrouding and carrying away her sorrowful presence into the past. . . . She is beholding the opening of her life like the earth beholds the rising sun. It pleases Feigele to fancy that the sun is under oath to the earth never to leave her in darkness. It seems to her that her father's spirit is looking down at her through the golden rays—looking, and blessing her for keeping the Kaddish oath!—Jewish Woman's Home Journal.

No irritation for baby's skin

Do this and keep his clothing soft, pure and comfortable

Nothing is so sensitive as baby's skin! Even the slightest roughness in his diapers, shirts and bands will inflame and irritate it.

Much trouble is directly due to washing diapers with harsh soap—soap containing free alkali. The alkali clings to the little garments in the form of a fine, white powder—almost impossible to rinse out. This causes "diaper rash."

To save baby's skin, use Lux for washing all his clothes. It is the mildest, purest, gentlest cleanser in the world. Lux contains no free alkali, and the pure suds rinse out completely. Lux keeps baby's garments soft, clean, comfortable and safe!

Lever Brothers Limited,
Toronto.

How to wash diapers

Remove solid matter at once and soak diapers in cold water. Whisk two tablespoonfuls of Lux into thick suds in a tub of very hot water. Let diapers soak a few moments, then dip up and down, pressing suds repeatedly through them. Rinse thoroughly in three waters.

A Historic People without a History

By A. L. SACHAR

Wherever we turn, whatever we read, the old familiar platitude is ever thrown at us, that the Jewish race is endowed with immortal life. It withstands corrosion; it resists assimilation. The stake, the rope, the ghetto, the badge have alike been futile weapons in the hands of implacable enemies; persecution, ridicule, obloquy have alike failed to extinguish that marvelous time-defying spirit. And what is more remarkable, the victimized Jew is not in the position of the legendary Tithonus for whom the fair Eos begged immortal life but forgot to beg immortal youth, and who consequently lived on and on, wrinkled and gnarled and senile and useless. Age does not bring intellectual decreptitude to the oldest of living peoples; time does not crush the Jew into the sere and yellow.

Wherever Jews gather we hear these facts proclaimed in sonorous tones, embellished with adjectives until the sentences literally drip with the honied praises. But how many of us actually know the Jewish history which thus excites our pride? How many of us are not simply repeating phrases that have been so often expressed that we no longer take the trouble to understand them? To do so is a very common habit, and one which we forgive all too easily. There are those who talk glibly of the immortal glory of Dante without ever having opened his "Divine Comedy," or of the brilliant animation of Cervantes without ever having leafed "Don Quixote." One may almost say, with the old cynic, that they remain classics because they remain unread!

Some favoured few find it impossible to pass through a Sunday School or some other religious institution without assimilating a part of the Bible story; a chosen remnant of these few even manage to complete the entire Bible. But there certainly the Jewish historical training ends. Post-biblical history remains a vast Hyrcanian wood which seems to frighten the most daring. The Jew is suddenly swallowed up by the Babylonian or the Roman or some other kind of evil heathen and then, by some mysterious process, unexpectedly emerges in the modern world; one of God's, most successful conjuring tricks! Here the Jew is now crowded in the ghettoes of Russia and Poland, or prominent in the intellectual and political life of Western Europe, or monopolizing the commerce and industry of the New World. But the gulf is deep and impassable between the flaming temple, the agonized cries of Akiba and this modern life in the pale of Pinsk or the sweatshop of New York.

There are many singular things about the Jew, but the most singular is certainly this studied neglect of a history which he takes every opportunity to extol. Were the history unimportant or uninteresting one might understand the paradox, but it forms one of the most fascinating chapters in Clio's bulky manuscript. Even the historian is amazed. He traces the steady rise and fall of peoples and so even is the ebb and flow of the story that he can only conclude that history repeats itself. But when he comes to the Jew, when he begins to go down the long vista of history with him, from the very threshold of ancient civilization through a three or four thousand year labyrinth, he is perplexed. Nowhere can he find an analogy to make clear the remarkable tenacity of this stiff-necked people which refuses to follow the example set by other and mightier races. The historian must reluctantly admit that as far as the Jew is concerned, history does not repeat itself: it is only historians who repeat each other.

The length of a people's story is in itself of course nothing to vaunt. But here we have a tale with three dimensions. It has breadth and depth, too. Its sweep includes the history of Europe; it is intertwined in the warp and woof of the history of every country. One needs no more than a cursory examination of the most important epochs. Towering high in the bright panorama of ancient history stands the clash of Hellenism and Hebraism, two Weltanschaungs, two ways of looking at life; the Greek worshipping beauty and aesthetics, the Jew to whom truth is the only beauty and ethics the only aesthetica; the Greek stressing, as Arnold put it, spontaneity of consciousness, the Hebrew strictness of conscience. Bentwich suggests that the world's mightiest religion could have resulted from a union of two such cultures, the driving force of Socrates, the inspiring visions of the Prophets.

"Hellas the nurse of man complete as man,
Judaea pregnant with the living God."

Or, turning to another landmark in the history of civilization: We know all too little of the interaction of influences which brought about Christianity. But there is no more important fusion of ideals in all history—the moral principles of the Pharisee, the ascetism of the Essene, the loving humanity of Hillel, the burning missionary enthusiasm of the apostles. Then the story in the middle ages, when Jewry remains an international people without an emperor, an international religion without a pope. Civilization is all but eclipsed by Teutonic barbarism; the old Roman world is in utter ruins. Who can understand the transmission of the ancient heritage and the Arabic heritage to modern life without estimating the place of the mediaeval Jew; or the economic life of mediaeval Europe without analyzing the life of the despised and persecuted usurer. Follow the story down to the Protestant Reformation and attempt to leave out the Jewish influence on humanism and on the great Protestant reformers. It is not only omitting Hamlet, but Rosencrantz and Guilderstern as well. And finally, the breakdown of the political and economic barriers which follow close upon the cataclysm of the French Revolution; there is a complete permeation of intellectual and commercial life of modern Europe by Jewish influence. In the light of such a tale how feeble sound the acrid columns of anti-Semitic print or the uninformed blusterings of rapid anti-Semitic orators.

Dubnow, in his charming little brochure on Jewish history, indicates another phenomenon which renders the story even more interesting. The history of most nations is largely made up of political developments, governmental changes, military achievements; generals, diplomats, politicians fill the stage almost completely. In the Jewish story there is little about political development, less of military pomp and almost nothing of the glamour of diplomacy. Of course a scattered people without a hearth of its own, denied the right to live completely at the hearth of other nations, could not very well be expected to specialize in affairs that form the soul of other peoples. Whatever the cause, the fact remains that the Jewish story is the story of intellectual effort. Prevented from becoming people of the world, Jews became, par excellence, people of the Book. And though their intellectual efforts were often misguided, often obscurantist, often sad and tragic, they were always sincere, intensive and earnest.

The tragic side of the story of the Jew comes of his very vitality, his steadfast resistance, down to recent days, to the most alluring forms of assimilation. "If there are ranks in suffering," writes Zunz, "Israel takes precedence of all the nations. If the duration of sorrows and the patience with which they are borne ennoble, the Jews are among the aristocracy of every land. If a literature is called rich in the possession of a few classic tragedies, what shall we say to a national tragedy lasting for fifteen hundred years, in which the poets and the actors were also the heroes?" In deepest misery the Jew has always turned from the present and has gone for consolation to a dim but glittering past; there he has built his future. Hope has never been extinguished; the darker the night, the brighter the ray. Generation after generation sacrificed itself stoically for a future which seemed never to come. One thinks of the remarkable sacrifice to the future of the bees, described by Maeterlinck. The hive is slowly built up by the laborious effort and painful

Impressions of an Immigrant

By G. TELLER

When nine months ago I stepped upon Canadian soil, a sense of joy and satisfaction filled my heart. Cordiality, goodness and sincerity expressed by Canadian Jewry to the new immigrants were the best proof that we had come to a friendly country. We believed that at last we had found what in vain we had sought during the long years of enforced wanderings. We did not come here to make money. We needed a new land for repose and peaceful living.

Only nine months have passed since that time and much has been changed around. Instead of goodness, friendship and cordiality, we have to hear at every corner: "We are tired and disappointed." It means: The Toronto Jews are tired of helping and are disappointed in the immigrants.

I am not making any appeals. I don't defend the immigrants, but I do want to understand the new situation.

When Canadian Jews say they are "tired" I understand them. Every day, almost every hour, different appeals are made to them by local institutions and foreign organizations. And the Canadian Jews are really tired of refusing. It is quite impossible for them to be tired of giving for, fortunately, no collections are being made for immigrants.

If Canadian Jewry is disappointed in the new immigrants, why? Have the immigrants broken the laws of the country? Did not they appreciate the hospitality of Canadian Jews? Have they committed crimes against morals? I think not. The immigrant has simply tried to make a living for himself and his family. He fought against starvation. He did all the work in his power and ability. He gave to everybody the opportunity of using his knowledge, experience and . . . hunger.

It seems to me the attitude of Canadian Jewry is simply built on error. It is not disappointment they feel.

To understand the present situation, it is necessary for a moment to recall a past one. Twenty, thirty, forty years ago the American doors were open to immigration. People who could not, for one reason or another, make a living at home, immigrated there or into other countries with good possibilities and larger perspectives. The greatest immigrant wave poured into the United States, for Canada was not so well-known and had a reputation less favourable because of greater hardships.

Who then were the first Jewish pioneers in Canada? They were not of the quality of the Jewish pioneers in the United States. The most untalented and unsuccessful people, professionals who did not know their profession, many who feared to be recognized, some who had been forced to run away from sight came to Canada.

Now, let us look at the new, so-called, refugee immigrants. The best description of them is given by the honorary secretary of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society, J. A. Woolf, who in his last report writes: "Let us remember that the psychology of the refugee-immigrant is an entirely different one from the psychology of the ordinary relief family. In many cases the immigrant has seen better days. Many of them were in business and even in professions. The immigrant is not an economically or social broken applicant; he is a man of understanding, of purpose and of determination. All he asks is a fair opportunity to establish himself, and, above all, to adjust himself." Mr. Woolf forgot to add that the refugees, in the majority, are educated, practical and adaptable to different circumstances.

Now the rough, uneducated, inexperienced first pioneers were forced by hard physical uninterrupted labour to hew out a way of living. All they have attained has been done by the sweat of their brows, by the exertion of their muscles. Here comes a refugee-immigrant, for example, a man of another generation, other culture, other practical education, a man who has passed through a terrible path of fire, water and wandering and yet a man who is able to adapt himself almost at once.

And this new man, refugee-immigrant, begins to make a living. He does not need to contrive the old way of the old pioneers. No wonder old pioneers look at this new one with anger, with envy. That is the real word, not disappointment—it is envy and jealousy. The old pioneers can't forgive our capacity for adjustment.

People who have never learned in tens of years the language of their new land can't forgive a boy refugee, who makes a living for himself, his mother and sister by peddling and finishes the night public school in only one winter.

The old pioneer hates the new immigrant for the fact that in five months he speaks a little and in nine months is able to write an English letter. These people are revolted by the fearlessness of the new immigrant, who goes to the country and farm, trying to make a living so they not only refuse to assist the immigrants, but even put sticks in the wheels, saying: "We are disappointed."

Instead they should do justice to the refugees, and, if some time Canada flourishes and blossoms it will be to the great credit of the new immigrants, not of the old.

MADE ESPECIALLY FOR THE VACATIONIST

Once the varied pleasures of Muskoka Lakes have been enjoyed there is always an urge to return to this pine and balsam-scented land of sunshine that cannot be denied. Lolling in the sunshine, bathing in the clear waters, or cruising amidst the hundreds of islands, dancing, golfing, playing tennis are only a few of the diversions awaiting the vacationist at Muskoka Lakes.

There is plenty of accommodation for everybody — accommodation to suit every taste and purse from the luxuriously equipped Royal Muskoka to the quiet little hostelry with only a dozen guests.

Go to Muskoka Lakes this year. You won't have a dull moment if you holiday in this wonderful vacation land.

Any agent of the Canadian National Railways will gladly give you illustrated literature and complete information.

For the convenience of those desiring information on summer resorts and vacation trips in general, the Public Library of Toronto, Reference Division, corner College and St. George Streets, maintains a complete supply of tourist literature published by railway and steamboat lines. The Travel Bureau is open daily except Sunday, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 8 p.m.

Louis Marshall, of New York, has declined Dr. Chaim Weizmann's invitation to attend the 14th Zionist Congress. It was stated that Mr. Marshall prefers that the question of the entrance of non-Zionists into the Jewish Agency, which is to be finally decided by the Congress, be presented to the Congress by Dr. Weizmann himself. Mr. Marshall further stated that the fear prevalent in certain Zionist circles that the $15,000,000 campaign of the Joint Distribution Committee for Jewish colonization work in Russia and relief in other European countries would interfere with the collections of the Keren Hayesod or with the proposed plan of the Palestine Economic Corporation is groundless.

Paris contains two schools where not a single pupil is French. The fact is reported as evidence of the extraordinary influx of foreigners since the war. Both are situated in the Jewish section of the city in the middle of a busy business centre near the Hotel de Ville.

The pupils are mostly of Polish or Russian origin, but also many are Rumanians, Hungarians and even Egyptians and Turks—all, however, belonging to the Jewish denomination. The report says they are growing up "good French" and will prove a valuable asset in the future as they are becoming completely assimilated, although many of their parents continue unable to converse in the French language.

A Historic People Without a History

devotion of all the workers. Then when all is complete, when the hive is abundant with fragrant honey, the whole swarm leaves, bequeathing the honey, the combs and all the vast machinery so laboriously accumulated and perfected —leaves all to the embryo bees who are soon to awaken.

In the face of such a story it is almost pathetic to note the valiant efforts made by some of our Judaeo-centric Jews to establish the Jewishness of various great characters in modern history, from Columbus onward. Every little while we read of the results of patient investigation into the ancestry of the makers of modern history and of the triumphant conclusion that Jewish blood actually coursed in the veins of the newly discovered hero. These are laudable efforts but to overlook the story of "legitimate" Jews while we go hunting in strange fields for lost sheep is very much like begging for scraps on street corners with the house full of rich food.

No people neglects its past as lightheartedly as we do. Every nation realizes clearly that patriotism, national consciousness, honest national pride are bound up indissolubly with its history. Indeed the chief value in history lies not in the information which it adds but in the experience which it brings. It makes the individual live through other lives than his own. It enriches his experience. And in doing so it creates a healthy national pride and consciousness. Hence every people trains its youth to devotion and loyalty by making vivid and living the story of the past. It often goes so far in its use of history for patriotic purposes that patriotism is put in the first place and truth in the second place.

The greatest tragedy is not a people without a country; it is a people with a neglected history. Chamisso has a beautiful allegory of Peter Shelmihl, who sells his shadow for an inane purse. To-day Jews are allowed to become prominent in merchandise, in banking, in science and in literature. Treated thus, they are found to be not only a shrewd, efficient people, but idealistic altruistic and philanthropic as well.

The mind reverts to that most disgraceful era of Europe when Spain, as Symonds says, "began to devour and depopulate herself. The very life of the nation, in its commerce, its industry, its free thought, its energy of character, was deliberately and steadily throttled."

In 1492, the year Columbus discovered America, the edict against the Jews was issued in Spain. The entire Jewish population was bidden to leave the country in four months, carrying with them no gold or silver.

Then began a scene of inhumanity the like of which the world never saw. Eight hundred thousand Jews fled. Let Symonds describe, in his "Age of Despots":

"Some went to the coast of Africa, where the Arabs ripped their bodies up in search for gems or gold they might have swallowed, and deflowered their women; some for Portugal, where they bought the right to exist for a large head-tax, and where they saw their sons and daughters dragged away to baptism befor their eyes. Others were sold as slaves, or had to satisfy the rapacity of their persecutors with the bodies of their children. Many flung themselves into the wells, and sought to bury despair in suicide.

"The Mediterranean was covered with famine - stricken and plague - breeding fleets of exiles. Putting into the port of Genoa, they were refused leave to reside in the city, and died by hundreds in the harbour. Their festering bodies bred a pestilence along the whole Italian seaboard, of which at Naples alone 20,000 persons died. Flitting from shore to shore, these forlorn spectres, the victims of bigotry and avarice, everywhere pillaged and everywhere rejected, dwindled away and disappeared."

It does us good at times to read the record of history. We have been such unspeakable were-wolves—in the name of Christianity! We are still such unspeakable were-woves in the name of patriotism.

When shall we be purged of this most horrific of human forms of poison ignorance, race antipathy?—The Spectator, S. F. Examiner.
